A gift to my Beautiful girl

PROLOGUE

I want to start this book by a gratitude to my girlfriend that gave me a chance to feel an unbelievable love which i was seeking for a long time, and also i want to say thank you for being with me every time in darkest moments of my life. This is a great opportunity for me to say what is in my brain and why my heart is pounding every time i see your eyes. I want you to read this book with a knowledge that i am not really good at writing and there might be a lot of mistakes either grammatical or confusion in lines however i tried my best. Also i need to mention how i tried to complete this book as soon as possible to see your smile while reading this book.

CHAPTER 1

FIRST REASON

"In all the world, there is no heart for me like yours. In all the world, there is no love for you like mine"
-Maya Angelou

To start this journey with you, I want to tell you the first reason. The first reason is your beautiful heart. I know it may sound like some kind of cliché, but you're so kind and so deft with your emotions. You can set aside your own feelings for me just to make me happy. That's the power of your gentle, soft, and compassionate heart. You are a miracle God gave me, a radiant soul with the power to comfort, to love, and to spread kindness through every word.

I want to touch that heart and kiss it. I really do. I don't want anyone to have even a portion of it. It's all mine. Every second your heart pumps blood through your veins is a life given to me, a small bulb of light illuminating my heart. It's lovely that I am waiting for you. You know what? Sometimes I think waiting is actually a beautiful thing. You learn how to be loyal even when the distance stretches across hundreds of kilometres, and you learn how to connect our hearts. Your kind heart blessed me like Jesus and introduced me to love, loving myself, loving my parents, loving you, and loving life. That was significant because it changed me. It really did. The rhyme of your heart is unbelievably beautiful and indescribable that catches me like a gravity to a black hole, but instead of darkness, its full of the essence of life and the shining of your soul.

CHAPTER 2

SECOND REASON

Now i got to the next stage with you and I should become more descriptive.

I love you, because of your beautiful eyes. They open a gate to heavens. They really do. The square-like shape of it is so unique that no geometry topic is able to explain it. Its a miracle or a magic that no magician can do. It must be from heavens. Im sure your not from this boring rock, this lifeless people, your not like them. You reflect a fantasy world in your eyes, the fantasy that no J.K. Rowling neither George R. R. Martin could even imagine or depict in their mind. Your eyes are symbols representing pureness and clearness of your soul and its the essence of life flowing in it. Have you ever thought how valuable is your eyes? Yes, its priceless. The inability of counting it is killing me.

The endless compliments of your eyes are cutting my mouth, and no word is able to express this beauty. And I can stop watching them. They are identical to a magnets, attracting every parts of my body into its brightness and fulfilling every desires of mine. Its unbelievable, how gorgeous are they and sometimes I'm sad for you. Do you know how much money you can earn from showing your eyes to people? But no. I wont let anyone see those little Mona Lisas and they are all mine, my jealousy is endless and i know it.

CHAPTER 3

THIRD REASON

I love you because of your small brain. This functioning organism is my most favourite loving part. It determines your cuteness and it makes your anguish, the cutest thing in the world. I am in love with your decisions and the way you think when you face an obstacle. Its just unbelievably sweet. Really, how a person is able to be this gorgeous and still intelligent, its the gods masterpiece, the unexplainable art that symbolizes love. Your brain is not just a piece of your body, its the core of this indescribable system that makes me speechless all the time when i wander through my thoughts.

Every neuron and every connection through axons that are made in your brain, are the rhymes of Beethoven. They are dancing and sending the orders, showing your perfect creation through every pulse. The emotions coming from it, are sweetest puzzles i had in my life. They are complicated and hard to dissolve but i cherish every moment of it. I really do. The riddles that captivate me inside those extraordinary moments of life that taste like apple pie in a breezy summer day that you forget about every hardship.

CHAPTER 4

FOURTH REASON

I love you, because of your little mouth. The most mesmerizing part of your face that stuns me every-time i look at you. Those soft gentle lips of you that i know, i know it tastes like strawberry cake with the smell of lemon zest and vanilla. Damn, i love it. I swear i can kiss them every second of my life till Im a lifeless man in a coffin. Im a slave in your luminous kingdom of beauty. The scars on your lips are the textures of love. Giving meaning to every second of stress or bad feelings in your life. Those are marks that you put on yourself to tell me what your facing. They are hints that leads me to exploring you every day, and knowing you better to admire your enchanting presence. You are not human to me.

Those lips are as soft as heaven's clouds and warm as your heart that melts me into liquid. In this book i don't want to explore the sexual aspects of your beauty but i want to mention that how attractive are those beautiful lips that makes me want them every second in my life. I want to frame them. I will buy a fully diamond frame to preserve your lips in a border. A border that is my favourite home and a terrifying place for others. I want to be prey in your mouth.

CHAPTER 5

FIFTH REASON

I love you because of your beautiful ears. Those two soft inevitable peaces on your head, are the cutest thing in the world. The shape of Spiral of Theodorus is hidden in both of your ears, representing the fearful symmetry of your unquestionable existence.

Your little gates beside your face,
Two hidden doors to a sacred place.
What worlds have slept within your walls?
What ancient songs echo through your halls?
What dreams have rested against your skin?
What whispered secrets have wandered in?

The moon might envy your perfect design,
And beg for a place in your kingdom divine.
If you are corruption, let me be the crime,
Let me be guilty for all of my time.
If you are the queen, then I'll be your chef,
Cooking you love with whatever I have left.
For even the angels, with all of their grace,
Could never recreate the curves of your face.
And if the whole world had a thousand ears,
I'd whisper my love to yours for a thousand years.

CHAPTER 6

SIXTH REASON

I love you because of your beautiful eyebrows. Those two infinite wheat plains resting above your eyes, with their old and wise trees standing quietly across the horizon, hiding the sweetest taste of life behind every little curve. There is a natural symmetry in their shape that no scientist could ever fully explain, nor could I, even after spending hours wandering through the endless corridors of mathematics. They are like two delicate strokes of a painter who somehow knew exactly where every line of your face was supposed to be. Not too much, not too little. Just enough to make your eyes even more extraordinary, as if the universe had carefully calculated every angle before creating you.Sometimes I wonder how something so small can have such a tremendous effect on your entire face. A slight movement, a tiny change in their position, and suddenly the whole world changes. When you are confused, they speak before your mouth does. When you are angry, they declare war without saying a single word. And when you are happy, they become part of that beautiful expression that makes me forget whatever I was thinking about. Even their smallest movements have a language of their own, one that I have been trying to learn ever since I fell in love with you. I want to understand every expression, every silent question, every little sign that tells me what is happening inside that extraordinary mind of yours. Your eyebrows might seem like two ordinary features to the rest of the world, but to me, they are two more pieces of evidence in the case I have been building for a long time.

The accusation?

That you are impossibly beautiful.

And honestly, I have more than enough evidence to convict you.

CHAPTER 7

SEVENTH REASON

I love you because of your nose. That small peace of art that is shaped by the goddess of shapes. That intimidating soft part of your body, makes me believe in god. The holly spirit that is inside you. I found my god in your beauty. The unsolved mystery case that i love to be the detective in it. The shape of your nose is representing the uniqueness of you that I'm never able to find it in any other creature. It has a geometry that should be applied to house and apartments, although if i let them to see it. Its curves are like the delicate strokes of a painter who spent a thousand years searching for perfection, and its proportions seem to whisper secrets that even Euclid could never uncover. Sometimes I wonder if the universe borrowed its most beautiful equation just to create you, hiding its solution in the smallest details of your face. Your nose is a tiny mountain in the landscape of your beauty, standing proudly between two oceans of wonder. I could spend a lifetime studying its shape like a detective chasing an impossible mystery, drawing imaginary lines and searching for answers in every angle.

CHAPTER 8

EIGHTH REASON

I accuse your hair of committing the most unforgivable crime in human history: the theft of time. Every time you move your head, another second disappears from my life, and I stand there like a helpless witness, unable to remember what I was about to say. The authorities have investigated gravity, questioned the wind, and interrogated every mirror in your house. Nothing. The only suspect remains uncooperative, falling across your face with the confidence of a criminal who knows the judge is already in love with her. I would like to present Exhibit A: a single strand of your hair. Exhibit B: my complete inability to think whenever you fix it with your fingers. Exhibit C: the thousands of imaginary conversations I have had with myself about how something so insignificant to you can become an entire event in my day. The prosecution rests. The defendant remains beautiful. The judge has resigned. And perhaps the most terrible part is that, even if I won this case, I would refuse to collect the damages. Keep every second you stole. Take a thousand more. Let the clock lose its mind trying to count the time I spend looking at you. I would rather live a shorter life full of moments I cannot explain than a hundred years in which your hair never once crossed my field of vision.

CHAPTER 9

NINTH REASON

I love you because of your little stomach. I don't know what kind of sorcery happens in that tiny cute space, but somehow even the thought of resting my head there makes the world feel a little less cruel. If happiness had a physical address I suspect it would be somewhere beneath your ribs, hiding from the rest of humanity. Sometimes I imagine your stomach has a secret life of its own, quietly judging every decision you make, complaining when you're hungry, and celebrating whenever you eat something delicious. I wonder if it knows how much I want to hug you, or if it's completely unaware that it has become one of my favourite places I haven't even gotten to hold yet. And that's what makes me a little sad about loving you from so far away. There are so many ordinary things I want to do with you that other people probably never think twice about. I want to sit beside you, wrap my arms around you, and rest there without needing a reason to let go. No beautiful metaphors, no complicated explanations. Just you, me, and a moment that I wish I could have right now.

CHAPTER 10

TENTH REASON

I love you because of your fingers. Ten little creatures that somehow manage to turn the ordinary into something worth remembering. They hold your phone while you talk to me, scroll through messages, and type words that I sometimes reread like an idiot because I miss you too much to close the conversation. Isn't it strange? Your fingers can travel across a screen in seconds, crossing the distance between two countries, while I still cannot reach across mine to hold them. Sometimes I wonder what your hands would say if they could speak. Would they complain about how often you use them, or reveal all the little things you do when you're nervous, excited, or thinking about something? Perhaps they would tell me secrets even you haven't noticed. And if I ever get the chance to hold them, I don't think I'll have anything clever to say. I'll probably just look down at our hands together and wonder how something I've imagined so many times can finally be real. Until then, keep those fingers busy. Send me your ridiculous messages, your random thoughts, your little complaints about the day. I'll take every word. Because somewhere on the other side of a screen, those ten little creatures have become the closest thing I have to holding you.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Nima Ghorbania.
writing this novel on 18th year of my life is such a great experience that teaches me the writing and also helps me to concentrate more. Also this is a gift to my gorgeous girl that always supported me in every hardship i have been to. I love you my first and last love. Also i wanted to talk about this situation which in the world of A.I. that the art is dying, the best thing to do is to preserve our human skills and creativity and always be grateful for this amazing gifts we have, because who knows about the future. There might be robotic life waiting for us, or an ordinary lifeless routines trying to catch us and imprison me and you. So the art would be the last solution. I hope when I read this novel in 40 50 years, be proud of myself and see the world in a better aspect with you so the life show its way to me.
